BEST IN BUSINESS

By Emma Britton

THE borough's leading entrepreneurs were celebrated at a reception for the winners and finalists in the Mayor of Hackney's Business Awards 2010.

Now in their fifth year, the annual awards are dedicated to celebrating the excellence and diversity of businesses in the borough. A team of prestigious judges from the business world joined the Mayor of Hackney, Jules Pipe, in presenting awards to the outstanding local entrepreneurs at Holborn Studios, N1, which hosted the event and sponsored one of the categories.

Jules Pipe, Mayor of Hackney, said: "These awards are about celebrating excellence.

"They are also about recognising the outstanding contribution that local businesses make to Hackney's economy.

> "There's a whole new spirit of enterprise, and that's what we need to build the economy"

"The entries for this year's awards showed again the amazing diversity in the borough's business sector and I congratulate all the winners and short listed nominees for their entrepreneurial success."

The Mayor handed out awards to the winners on 14 September with entrepreneur and business mentor Rachel Elnaugh, one of the original 'dragons' on the BBC's Dragons' Den and founder of Red Letter Days.

She said: "It's great to be part of enterprise events like this. Because of Dragons' Den there's a whole new spirit of enterprise, and that's what we need to build the economy.

"What's great about these awards is that they are a good way to encourage local businesses."

Message from the Mayor

An exciting place to do business

IT was my great pleasure this week to host the annual Mayor's Business Awards, recognising the outstanding contribution that local businesses make to Hackney's economy. The awards are now in their fifth year and the range of entries showed the amazing diversity in the borough's business sector, and the creativity and the passion behind Hackney's success stories.

Hackney has to be one of the most exciting places to be doing business, anywhere in the UK. With 2012 only two years away, Hackney is poised for one of the most intense periods of economic activity in its history. As one of the main host boroughs for the Games, we have the opportunity to permanently transform the local economic landscape. The international broadcast and media centre will create 900 thousand square feet of commercial space, and has the potential to generate thousands of skilled jobs.

Hackney Council has a vision for this space to become a hub for creative industries, from broadcast and media, to design and digital businesses. The success of existing businesses in Shoreditch, Dalston and, increasingly, Hackney Wick, shows that this borough is already the creative heart of London, and the ideal place to host a permanent village for the sector. I was delighted to read a report from the Greater London Assembly this month that supported this vision, and I will continue to work with the Government, Mayor of London, and the Olympic Park Legacy Company to make it a reality.

2012 is also an opportunity to drive the reputation of Hackney. East London leads the field in arts, culture, nightlife, food, new media and many other industries. Hackney itself is fast becoming a destination in its own right, which is good news for many local businesses. It is the job of the Council, with partner organisations, to shape that reputation, which will encourage inward investment and visitors, and change our economic landscape for the better.

Hackney needs its local business community, now more than ever. It is a key player in the economic health and well-being of the borough, and makes a major difference in our high streets and town centres. For that the business community deserves recognition, which is what the awards are about.

More than 100 young people turned out for Hackney's first youth conference at the Town Hall on 11 September

Seen and heard

By Gracia Douglas

HACKNEY'S first Youth Conference saw more than 100 young people turning up at the Town Hall to enjoy a packed programme of activities.

The event was organised by Hackney Youth Parliament (HYP) members, Youth Ambassadors, and the four area youth forums – Homerton, North East, Shoreditch and Stoke Newington – with support from the Council's Youth Service. The conference on 11 September was open to local young people aged 11 to 19.

Debates, screenings and interactive workshops encouraged dialogue among the young people, inviting them to come up with their own solutions to the challenging issues of the day.

Highlights included a comedy workshop, as well as one exploring heritage, migration and community cohesion, led by 14-year-old Jahmala Exton. Another popular item was the presentation of awards by Cllr Rita Krishna, Cabinet Member for Children's Services, and Superintendent Leroy Logan, of the Met Police, to Hackney Youth Parliament members in recognition of their contributions over their two-year term.

The finale was a performance-led celebration featuring live vocal acts, prizes and poetry reading.

Cllr Krishna said: "Congratulations to the young people and staff for their hard work and commitment in delivering Hackney's first Youth Conference.

"Chosen and developed by young people for young people, it was a well structured, informative and thoroughly entertaining event and a great success for all involved."

All smiles, then it got Messi...

Lionel Messi arrives at Hackney Marshes. Players from Cardinal Pole and Bridge Academy had their dreams dashed after Messi was mobbed by fans

By Marcel Reinard

SHUFFLING out of a helicopter with his duffel bag, even at 100 paces, 'la pulga atómica' (the atomic flea) Lionel Messi looked a little bemused.

Hackney Marshes is a long way from the glamorous Nou Camp where the football plies his trade for Barcelona, and London was experiencing the first snap of winter.

Yet, the Argentine FIFA World Footballer of the Year, smiled warmly, ready for a kick about with students from two Hackney secondary schools – Cardinal Pole and Bridge Academy – part of an adidas promotional tour – on 15 September. It was supposed to be a 'secret' game at the home of amateur football, but following leaks to newspaper websites, hundreds of young fans turned up to witness the football wizard in action.

Within seconds of the helicopter landing, the player and his security guards were surrounded.

The best efforts of his security team failed to maintain crowd control, so after he'd signed just a few footballs and shirts, Messi was whisked away in a people carrier to the next part of his whistle-stop tour, leaving Cardinal Pole and Bridge Academy students and teachers disappointed.

adidas later issued a statement saying the plans had to be changed due to security fears.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Empire hosts a Marvel-ous time

HACKNEY Empire was filled to the brim with actors clad in 1940s costume for its most recent silver screen outing, when the production team behind Captain America: The First Avenger rolled into the borough.

The much-anticipated super-hero movie, directed by Joe Johnston and starring Chris Evans in the title role, was filmed in the Empire for three days, during which time the Town Hall Square was buzzing with American GIs, and women in curlers and bobby pins.

The production, also starring Tommy Lee Jones and Samuel L Jackson, plus Brit actors Dominic Cooper and Hayley Atwell, made the most of local amenities, using Hackney Town Hall's Assembly Rooms to house the make-up and costume departments, and Ocean to feed the huge cast and crew.

Staff remained tight-lipped over which scenes were being filmed inside the 109-year-old theatre, but the costumes suggest the earlier section of the forthcoming blockbuster. The film is due for release in 2011.

HACKNEY's unique place in the history of reggae culture is celebrated in an evocative exhibition being held at Hackney Museum.

Titled Reggae Rebels, the show runs throughout Black History Month in October and explores the music's roots and its journey from Africa to Jamaica, and then the UK.

The exhibition profiles the artists, venues, sound systems and fans that made it happen, including the legendary Four Aces Club in Dalston Lane, and later on, Phebes in Stoke Newington. The Four Aces Club, which opened in 1966 on the site of a disused cinema, became the focal point for the borough's burgeoning West Indian population and for curious and creative young Brits enamoured with black music and culture.

Over the years it hosted a number of international stars including Stevie Wonder, Jimmy Ruffin, Jimmy Cliff, Ben E. King and Bob Marley.

The main section of the exhibition profiles the work of photographer Dennis Morris, who grew up in Dalston and documented the emergence of Rastafarianism as a powerful voice of rebellion within Jamaican music.

Morris began taking photographs as a child in the early 1970s.

In 1975, while still only 14, he befriended Bob Marley and The Wailers. Marley appointed him the official UK tour photographer.

Morris told Hackney Today: "The next morning I packed my PE bag and went off with them on tour.

"We went to Blackpool, Leeds and all over, but then it snowed. The rest of Bob's band couldn't handle the cold and wanted to go back to Jamaica, so they cancelled the tour and went home."

Morris's work graced the cover of Melody Maker and Time Out before he was out of his teens. It was this kind of impact that reggae, its music, culture and rebels, had on many young people in Hackney and beyond.

The Speaker (top) addressing the crowd that gathered in St Leonard's Church, Shoreditch; and colourful marchers throng the streets of central Hackney, including Ronan the dog

Taking pride

By Marcel Reinard

THE borough sent out a message of community cohesion and took a stand against intolerance during the first Hackney Pride march.

Nearly 1,000 people across races, sexualities, genders, ages and religions turned out for the 4 September march, a positive event in response to homophobia, transphobia and all hate crimes. The march began outside Hackney Town Hall, followed Hackney Road, and ended with speeches in St Leonard's Church, Shoreditch.

Groups including Out East, Unite, UNISON, and the Hackney Community Engagement Board (HCEB) jointly organised the event. Terry Stewart, from HCEB, said: "For me it was a huge success. I've also got to give credit to the Speaker of Hackney, Cllr Sally Mulready, who brought her family to the march. She made such a warm speech and gave us confidence that she was committed to putting measures in place."

He added: "The Council's equality and diversity team also made a valuable contribution, along with the Hackney Employees forum."

Terry also praised Reverend Paul Turps for welcoming the rally to St Leonard's, and The Learning Trust for 'Schools Out', a project that he called 'a very important lifeline for young people as well as a great educational tool within the borough'.

> "Hackney Pride shows how we can all work together to secure equality"

The Speaker said she was happy to see Hackney community groups take a stand against violence. Adding: "Hackney Pride shows how we can all work together to secure equality for people who are lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender, and I congratulate the organisers and everyone who took part making it a successful event."

NEWS IN BRIEF

An artist's impression of the new library and archive

A new chapter

DALSTON'S new flagship Library and Archive is taking shape, with internal fit-out works set to begin.

The state-of-the-art building, due to open in spring 2011, will be over twice as large as the current library in Dalston Lane, which it replaces.

It will have a cafe and education room, dedicated to writer and essayist CLR James. It is also set to feature separate adult and children's libraries, a teen zone and a 'quick picks' area for people in a hurry.

There will be a wide range of books, study materials, and online reference sources, as well as community and education facilities. The library will offer free study spaces, computers, and wi-fi throughout.

The borough's archives, some dating back to the 13th century, are also being relocated to the new site from their current home in De Beauvoir Road. They will be available for use by all, and include over 20,000 historic photographs and maps from throughout Hackney's history.

Cllr Jonathan McShane, Cabinet Member for Community Services, said: "Dalston Library and Archive will provide a much greater range of services for residents than currently available. Its location next to Dalston Junction station means it can also be used more easily by those from other parts of the borough."

Lap-dancing clubs: have your say

THE Council's licensing committee is inviting residents to take part in a public consultation looking at the way 'sex establishments' are licensed.

The committee is responsible for regulating sex shops, cinemas and entertainment venues, such as lap-dancing clubs and erotic dancing venues, and has drafted a new policy to determine whether to grant licences for these types of businesses in Hackney.

A policy is being proposed, which would mean no licences will normally be granted.

Hackney currently has one licensed sex shop in Hoxton and four premises that are 'licensed to provide live performances, or displays of nudity solely, or mainly, to sexually stimulate audience members'. The consultation runs until 13 December.

We mean business

Our best small & medium-sized firms win big at Mayor's annual awards

By Emma Britton

LOCAL entrepreneurs came together to recognise the individuals and teams that are behind some of the borough's most successful and innovative small and medium-sized businesses.

Five years on, the ethos behind the Mayor of Hackney's Business Awards remains as strong as ever – to encourage excellence in business practice; to showcase success; and to build the borough's reputation as a great place to do business.

Mayor Pipe said: "It is clear that small and medium-sized businesses and entrepreneurship remain crucial to Hackney's local economy.

"The Council recognises the importance of investment in this sector, especially in the current economic climate, and this is why we have continued to fund the Hackney Enterprise Network which provides tailored business advice, support and guidance for businesses throughout the borough."

Joining the Mayor on the judging panel were Sinclair Beecham MBE, co-founder of Pret a Manger and owner of the Hoxton Hotel; Ian King, Deputy Business Editor of The Times and Hackney resident; Yvonne Thompson CBE, one of the founders of Choice FM; and Dave Blake, Publishing Director at newspaper group Archant London, which publishes the Hackney Gazette.

The title of 'best in the business' went to HCT Group, provider of public transport and related training services.

Jude Winter, Deputy Chief Executive, said: "We run routes in Hackney and Islington, Hull, Leeds and Wakefield, among others.

"Hackney Council's support is a huge stabilising influence. One of the things I'm proud of is that we train women to be bus drivers. For example, a Turkish woman who had no qualifications and spoke no English, now drives a bus on the Olympic Park."

Dezeen limited, which runs design and architecture website dezeen.com, won the 'best creative or media business' crown. Co-founder Marcus Fairs, said: "Our business is based on a global audience, but we try to keep things local.

"Stoke Newington is a wonderful part of the world to live in – we want to tap into what this area has to offer. Two of our staff are moving here because they like it so much."

Martin Goodrich, of Green Bottle Unit, which took 'best green business', said: "I'm very proud to be associated with Hackney."

Clive Tritton, Chief Executive of Renaisi, commented on his organisation's award for 'best social enterprise', saying: "This is a success for Renaisi, but it's a success for Hackney because we started here."

Eleanor Lowenthal, owner of independent bookshop Pages of Hackney, which scooped 'best new business', said: "Most of our customers live within walking distance of our shop, so our business is as much about Hackney as our books.

"The award will mean a lot to our customers. At a time when everyone's worried about the economy, seeing a successful enterprise receive recognition will give encouragement to others."

Boulevard Catering and Events won 'best leisure or entertainment business'. Managing Director, Madeline Crouch, said: "We are absolutely delighted to win this award. Our eyes are set firmly on the 2012 Games which take place in less than two years' time. We firmly believe this will be a springboard for future success."

The event sponsors were: The Co-operative Bank; leisure operator GLL; environmental regeneration charity Groundwork; and Holborn Studios, Europe's largest photographic studio complex, which is in Shoreditch.

Artist Tom Hunter has lived in Hackney for 25 years

By Beccy Smart

ARTIST Tom Hunter's home in central Hackney, is a few streets away from where he first moved in 1986, 'to escape Dorset'. Now the father of a young family, he has lived in the borough for 25 years.

An illustrious photographer, his work has been bought and exhibited all over the world. He took the first photograph to be displayed in the National Gallery; has shown at the prestigious Saatchi Gallery; and his work is on permanent display at the Museum of London.

Living in a squat when he first arrived, and surrounded by artists and writers, he decided to change careers from a tree surgeon to photographer, inspired by the creative and unorthodox outlook of the borough's residents.

He explains: "Living in a squat lifted the financial pressure, and made changing your life to do something new, a very real possibility. There was also a really big creative and social scene around squatting – everyone you met was doing it, and we made our own entertainment. From gigs in people's back gardens, to squat parties."

In 1989, he spent a year on the Holly Street estate where he photographed 70 residents. Charles Saatchi later saw, and purchased, the body of work taken as part of this project.

Tom says: "It's about encapsulating Hackney, and the people who make it what it is, documenting them and showing how much the place has changed over the last 25 years."

His photography in the late 1980s and 1990s was inspired by, and a reaction to, what was going on in squats, from the demolition of old houses, to the stories of people who lived in them.

He felt driven to provide an alternative view of these people's chosen lifestyles to that portrayed in the mainstream press. Tom says: "I like to dignify everyday people, and those struggling. I like the style of the old Dutch masters of painting, who also dignified their subjects."

He explains using a large format camera gives him a 'painterly approach', and he often takes hours over each shot, adding: "I strive for my pictures to give a calmness that creates a chance to imagine what it would be like if you were in that person's position."

Taken in 1998, the most well-known picture in that style is of a young girl, with her baby, reading a repossession order. Like many of his pictures, it echoes a well known painting, in this case, Vermeer's 'Girl reading a letter at an open window'.

Tom's work is almost exclusively shot around Hackney, but he was surprised by the international interest it aroused. He says: "I never thought when I was producing pictures of my neighbours that they would be of interest to anyone in the US or Sweden, which proves you've got to follow your interests and passions, and it may pay off."

His social conscience hasn't ceased over the years; and these days he spends a lot of his time researching local communities, working with St Joseph's Hospice, Age Concern Hackney and Shelter. He goes to coffee mornings and listens to people's stories. He says: "It helps me create a sense of human history to the place. I'm interested by the different types of people who come to Hackney, a place which has always seen a lot of immigration."

One of Tom's current projects 'Prayer Places' documents the many different places of worship in Hackney. He is struck by the constant growth and change in the borough's religious centres. He says: "There are new churches and places of worship popping up all the time, due to the people coming to the borough. From pop-up mosques in car parks, to people using their front rooms."

And looking at his images you get a strong sense of the slowing of time and calmness, despite the relentless pace of change that he is inspired by – an engaging creative paradox.

All your recycling questions answered

Q: My neighbour's brown bin is full of rubbish, instead of garden waste, it is not being emptied and smells. Is it possible to get this taken away?

A: The Council is aware that some residents are using these bins to store rubbish and other materials, instead of garden waste. Residents should only place loose grass cuttings, leaves, branches, hedge clippings, plants and flowers in their brown bin.

Those that are not being used properly cannot be emptied by recycling crews. Staff will instead leave hangers on bins explaining to residents why they have not been collected, and how to use the service correctly.

People who continue to misuse their brown bins will no longer be offered the service, and their bin will be removed.

If you would like to report a bin that is being misused, or find out more about the service, contact the recycling team on the number below, or visit: www.hackney.gov.uk/recycling-brown-bin

Volunteers put their backs into preparing the land for the planned food forest in Haggerston Park

Forestry commission

By Sarah Menz

HACKNEY City Farm's free Food Forest is off to a flying start, thanks to a helping hand from volunteers.

Every Saturday in September they have constructed fences that will protect each little ecosystem. Over the coming months, these areas will be populated with edible perennials such as asparagus, globe artichokes and rhubarb. In December, fruit trees will also be planted at the site in Haggerston Park.

Produce grown in the community orchard will be for everyone to harvest, but the farm is keen to share it with older and younger neighbours at Morrell Court Residential Care Home and the Toucan Nursery.

New helpers are welcome to join the Council-funded project – the next volunteering day is 25 September.

Put Hackney's river in the running

RESIDENTS are being urged to take part in the first ever Our Rivers Awards by going online and voting for the 'best' river in England and Wales.

Why not cast a vote for the River Lee, set to become world famous as the thread that links several key venues for the 2012 Olympic and Paralympic Games?

Teeming with wildlife, it allows cyclists, walkers, rowers and runners to make the most of some of the borough's delightful green spaces as it takes them from Hackney Wick to Springfield Park.

The first person to cast their vote for the Our Rivers Awards was television presenter Philippa Forrester who appeared in BBC1's Halcyon River Diaries earlier this year. Other river enthusiasts including Chef Tom Aiken and wildlife writer, Steve Backshall, have named their favourite rivers.

Ralph Underhill, Our Rivers campaigner, said: "This is the first time the public has had a chance to vote for the river which is closest to the nation's heart. This award will be a great celebration of one of our richest wildlife habitats – and one that everyone can enjoy because no-one is more than a few minutes from a river, stream or brook."

Voting is open until 31 October.

A capital day out in the garden

RESIDENTS can visit 13 new food-growing gardens as part of the first ever Capital Growth Open Gardens Day.

Visitors will be able to find out what's going on at their local food-growing space, and how they can pitch in, as well as enjoying a day of activities on Saturday, 25 September.

The open day will be an opportunity to demonstrate how people can grow food in their own gardens or local public spaces. It also aims to offer a glimpse into the world of London's food-growing community.

In Hackney, people can visit St John's Estate Community Kitchen Garden, St John's Estate – off New North Road and Murray Grove, N1 – from 11am-4pm.

St John's Estate Community Kitchen Garden

Visitors can see how residents have turned an under-used area of their estate into a community kitchen garden. They also use the garden to hold events such as community meals, open days, and celebrations throughout the year – helping to build community spirit.

Residents also have the opportunity to enter the Edible Estates competition, which aims to find the best community food growing projects on London's housing estates. The deadline to register is 1 October.

Capital Growth, aims to create 2,012 new community food growing spaces in London by the end of 2012.

It is a partnership between London Food Link, the Mayor of London, and the Big Lottery Local Food Fund. Six hundred spaces have been created across the capital already.

Explore outdoors

The borough has a number of sites where young children are encouraged to find out about and explore the great outdoors

All stories by
Marcel Reinard

THE Royal Society for the Protection of Birds (RSPB) is calling for more youngsters to explore the natural world, after its research found they spend less time outdoors than previous generations.

Research commissioned by the charity asked a cross-section of ages to highlight their top childhood outdoor experiences. Playing with conkers (75 per cent); climbing trees (71 per cent); and building a camp or den (69 per cent) were most popular with the over 55s, but there was a dip for the same activities among the 15 to 34 age group.The RSPB highlighted 'Wild Place, Your Space' at the Waterworks nature reserve next to Hackney Marshes as a good example of a project that encourages young people to get first-hand experiences of nature.

In response to the findings, The Learning Trust pointed to partnerships with residential education centres like Kench Hill, in Kent, which give Hackney pupils a hands-on experience of rural environments.

East Reservoir in Stoke Newington has an outdoor education centre; Clissold Park is home to an aviary, animal enclosure, and butterfly tunnel; and Hackney City Farm in Goldsmiths Row, E2, is home to many farmyard animals.

Philippa Alden and her children enjoyed the event at Ocean

Lots of choice at schools fair

ARTS venue Ocean in Mare Street hosted an education fair that gave parents and primary pupils advice on choosing a secondary school.

More than 1,000 young people and their guardians attended The Learning Trust's schools fair, designed to help families find out more before submitting their preferred choices for 2011.

Eleven Hackney secondary and special schools took part in the event on 8 September. Visitors also heard about the borough's GCSE success, which saw Hackney beat its record number of pupils getting five A*-C grades including English and Maths, set last year.

Philippa Alden, mum-of-four, said: "It's great that there is one place where you can gather information from schools all at once. I've been able to get ideas of schools I didn't know about, or hadn't considered previously."

The Learning Trust Chief Executive, Alan Wood, said: "Going to secondary school is such an important chapter in a child's life and is just as much of a milestone for parents too.

"This event is about giving parents and children as much information as possible about the fantastic range of secondary schools in the borough.

"Given our record-breaking GCSE results and state-of-the-art buildings, I'm not at all surprised that this event attracted so many people from Hackney and elsewhere."

Cycling boss is coach of the year

THE cycling coach who led Hackney to two consecutive youth championship victories has won a prestigious award.

Keir Apperley was named Coach of the Year at the London Youth Games Hall of Fame awards for his contribution to Cycling Club Hackney (CCH). Since starting the club three years ago, Keir has led the team of 12 to 15-year-olds from Hackney schools to gold at both the 2009 and 2010 London Youth Games.

Collecting the award from Olympic gold medalist Linford Christie at the 9 September event, Keir described it 'an honour'. Adding: "It's my name on the trophy, but there's a lot more to it. There's a whole team involved in CCH.

"One day we're hoping to see the borough produce an international cycling champion and even, to dream some more, a world-beater. Why not? The talent is out there.

"At grassroots level we'd like to normalise cycling – so it becomes an everyday sport for people of all ages. It would be just great if Hackney could become a real hotbed of cycling sport."

CCH is an independent organisation, supported by the Council and partners including Hackney Homes and The Learning Trust. It meets every Saturday and Sunday for coaching sessions and also runs after school clubs.

Last Of The Real High Streets

8 Oct-27 Nov, Chats Palace Arts Centre, 42-44 Brooksby's Walk, E9 6DF

WHILE many high streets nationwide are filled with coffee chains or clothing outlets this 'wonderful and peculiar' E5 stretch is a rarity in modern UK, argues photographer Colin O'Brien and travel writer Jane Egginton.

Their 'Last Of The Real High Streets' exhibition is the end product of a year following Chatsworth Road, gathering stories from residents and retailers on the idiosyncratic street. Shops like Chatsworth Tyre Service and butcher Mighty Meat have been run by the same families for decades, and now sit alongside delis, fruit bars, gourmet cafés and an Afro hair shop. The computer shop doubles up as a Koranic school, and in the last few years a Kashmiri kebabary and West Indian takeaway have opened, each playing their own part to keep the road's community spirit alive.

Being within walking distance of the Olympic Park, might see the area change further, so Jane and Colin's work will remain a welcome document of one of Hackney's many independent and distinctive streets.

It is a wonderfully peculiar world

PREVIEW The Wonderful World of Hugh Hughes

By Kate Gibney

The Wonderful World of Hugh Hughes – Story of a Rabbit, The Pit, Barbican Centre, Silk Street, EC2Y 8DS

A WRYLY self-confessed 'emerging Welsh artist', Hugh Hughes is in equal measures heart-warming and unnerving as he throws himself into his one-man show – accompanied by a quiet musical friend.

It would be a great shame to give away any of the content of this delightful performance, as its great charm lies in its unpredictable nature. Suffice to say it centres on death, and that it is very amusing and not at all 'dark'.

The play is one of three deeply personal – and if Story of a Rabbit is anything to go by – wildly original performances, closely linked to Hughes' background in the small town of Llangefni, North Wales.

Floating considers the impossibility of leaving the place that we come from – in which Anglesey detaches itself from the mainland and heads for the Arctic; while 360 explores friendship via a trip up Mount Snowdon.

Although each play is a piece in its own right, having seen one, I am now very much inclined to complete the set.

REVIEW Pieces Of Vincent

By Danielle Marie Spriggs

Pieces Of Vincent, Arcola Theatre, Arcola Street, E9, until 25 September

AS I sit crossed legged on the floor, the opening scene of Pieces of Vincent transports the audience into the back seat of a car. Instantly I sense this is going to be no ordinary journey. Written by David Watson, Pieces of Vincent follows the story of nine characters whose lives are intertwined by the ripple effects of a social tragedy.

Vincent Carins is a young, free-spirit from Northern Ireland who has been estranged from his family and is adrift London. Despite being the central character, the majority of the play centres around the fragmented lives of a piano teacher, a city worker, a policeman and a grandmother who are all connected through Vincent.

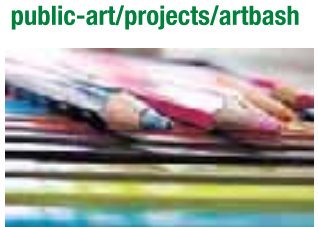

Award winning set designer Es Devlin, successfully challenged the traditional boundaries of staging by surrounding the audience with live action unfolding on all four walls of the studio.

However, the highlight of the play was certainly the imaginative use of film projection, which pieced together the fractured narrative of both past and present. The scene where Vincent and his first love Rachel part ways on Millennium Bridge was particularly emotional and thought provoking.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Has Hollywood lost its shine?

YH WORLD is looking at recent cinema releases – and asking if the big-budget, action-packed films Hollywood produces are worth the money it costs us to watch them. Some people say multi-million pound blockbusters are too predictable and similar to one other. A lot of money is spent on elaborate special effects and star names to play lead roles, but these films are sadly lacking in exciting plot twists and interesting characters. Others love to see their favourite big name actor in a high-energy movie full of outrageous stunts, dramatic escapes, and spectacular visuals.
What do you think? Do you prefer films closer to real life with more complex characters you can relate to? Or perhaps you love the rush of adrenaline you get from watching Hollywood heroes dodge bullets on their way to saving the world. Have your say at: www.yhworld.wordpress.com

THIS page has been compiled by staff and volunteers at YH World – a social enterprise which produces a website full of info about events, courses, and general happenings in Hackney.

Last year's World Mental Health Day events included a dance workshop at the Round Chapel on Powerscroft Road, E5

By Paul Knipe

HACKNEY is to mark a national campaign to promote the understanding of mental health with a Dalston arts fiesta.

As part of World Mental Health Day, on 10 October, Get Moving In Dalston aims to disperse some of the myths behind mental illness. Vortex Jazz Club in Gillett Square will host film screenings addressing mental health from 'unusual perspectives', say organisers, including a short titled 'Stigma' that explores a filmmaker's mental health issues.

Just outside in the square itself, live music will be provided by The Light Sleepers, a band based at Rectory Road's Lee House Rehabilitation and Employment Centre, and the Trust in Harmony Community Choir.

Visitors can also take part in aerobics, meditative qi gong and pilates sessions, fitness checks, a Bollywood dance workshop, and an interactive movement-based theatre performance.

At the Arcola Theatre, a reading of Sarah Kane's final play, '4.48 Psychosis', will explore tenets of severe clinical depression, followed by a discussion. The celebrated playwright died in 1999 following a battle with mental illness.

In the evening from 8pm, Vortex will host the annual Angela Carrington Awards, which recognises jazz open mic singing talent in London.

The events are being organised by the Council, in partnership with local NHS organisations and other voluntary sector agencies. Get Moving In Dalston runs from 12noon to 4pm.

Scrutiny review of services

A REVIEW has been launched in Hackney to help improve the quality of services available to disabled children and young people.

The Children and Young People Scrutiny Commission will look into what access young disabled people have to key services, and whether any improvements can be made to make it easier to use them. As part of the review, the commission will also examine the current level of support available to parents and carers in the borough, and whether the services on offer from partner organisations are suitable and accessible.

The Chair of the Children and Young People Scrutiny Commission, Cllr Gulay Icoz, said: "What we really need to address with this review is whether disabled children and young people from all communities in the borough have access to the many excellent services currently on offer across Hackney."

The next meeting of the Children and Young People Scrutiny Commission is at 7pm on 11 October, at Hackney Town Hall, E8.

A full report with recommendations is due to be published in January 2011.

Parents and carers can also give their views on how services could be improved. Call: 020 8356 3441; or e-mail: scrutiny@hackney.gov.uk before 18 October.

The rebuilding of Mapledene

By Elizabeth Green, Access & Outreach Officer, Hackney Archives

MAPLEDENE Road is one of the many Hackney streets that were bombed during the Second World War.

During just a few short weeks in October 1940, bombs fell on numbers 54, 75, 103, 117-121, and 127-129, as well as on houses in neighbouring Gayhurst Road and Lansdowne Drive.

Before the war, Mapledene Road, formerly known as Shrubland Grove, was a tree-lined, suburban street of Victorian terraced housing. The 1901 Census lists residents occupations as publishers clerk, butchers clerk, shipping agent, commercial traveller, pianoforte-maker, law writer and solicitors clerk.

Most of the homes had been built from the late 1850s onwards, and by 1870, the pre-war street pattern had been established.

After the war ended in 1945, there was pressure on local authorities to provide new housing for those made homeless during the Blitz.

Many sites were identified for redevelopment where buildings had been flattened by bombing. Mapledene estate in Hackney was one of the earliest of these post-war housing developments.

Plans were submitted to the Council in 1948, and the first part of the scheme, consisting of 18 terraced houses on the south side of the road, was opened in February 1950.

The homes were built by apprentices, as part of the Master Apprenticeship Scheme, aimed at training young workers in construction skills, vital in post-war London. The second part of the scheme consisted of 66 flats in three three-storey blocks, grouped around a laundry. The architects, Messrs Joseph, had worked extensively in Hackney before the war.

The estate is modest in both size and appearance – brick-built with plain Georgian-looking windows. Interestingly, unlike some neighbouring estates, such as Holly Street, which have been extensively redeveloped over the years, Mapledene has remained very much the same over the past 50 years, other than the closure of the laundry.

The estate is now the subject of a study to explore how bombing during World War Two, affected post-war housing in the borough.

The 'Mapledene Time Machine' project is a collaboration between Hackney Archives, the Royal Institute of British Architects (RIBA), the Building Exploratory and the Bridge Academy.

It is funded by the Museums Libraries and Archives Council as part of its 'Their Past Your Future' programme.

Students from the Bridge Academy in E2 piloted the project in a series of lessons devised by educational facilitators at the Building Exploratory and RIBA, with the estate close enough to make a site visit possible.

The students also visited both Hackney Archives and RIBA Architectural Library to look at original documents, photographs, plans and official records relating both to the estate, and post-war housing in Hackney generally.

In addition, the students interviewed retired architects from RIBA's Doric Club and long-term estate residents. The students' thoughts and reflections on these experiences have been recorded on the Radiowaves website for schools.

The Mapledene Time Machine project situates Hackney's experience of bomb damage during the Second World War and the rebuilding after, within the wider context of architects' vision for a post-war London, and shows how the destruction caused by bombing irrevocably changed the borough's landscape.

BRINGING THE PAST TO LIFE

Sophie Perkins, part-time Museum Manager

SOPHIE has worked at the museum for five years, and really likes to see it full of visitors learning about Hackney and its people.

She says: "I have a passion for history, and for enthusing people about the past and what they can learn from it. Hackney is a fascinating borough with a very interesting history – there is always more to find out and tell people about.

"I find it very satisfying to put on events and exhibitions, so that people say 'oh I never knew that' and tell their friends. Some museums are a bit quiet, but not us. We like everyone, even small children, to come and play and enjoy themselves."

Currently the museum is running a project called Mapping The Change, which collects memories, experiences and responses to the changes happening in Hackney in the run-up to the 2012 Olympic and Paralympic Games.

Activities have ranged from artist workshops for families, to creating a journalism course for local people, and leading historical walking tours.

Sophie added: "Residents are encouraged to come along and tell us what they think."

Treasure-trove

By Luke Selby

HACKNEY Museum has been at its present home in Reading Lane, next to the Town Hall Square, since 1992.

The Council-run service aims to collect, conserve and keep forever the history of Hackney, in order to encourage a sense of local identity and pride.

Its team of curators and education staff work with a huge range of Hackney's diverse communities, to reflect a true picture of the borough's history.

Some 36,000 people visit every year, of all age groups. Visitors come for many reasons: to find out more about local history; to take part in a toddler sing-along; enjoy a family art workshop; or reminisce about the past.

Museum staff welcome everyone to come and learn more about history

All of Hackney's primary schools take advantage of sessions where children can discover more about the borough's rich history.

A big success this year was Brain Boxes & Boundless Books, an exhibition created in conjunction with Homerton hospital's brain injury recovery unit.

The display included moving work created by patients with brain injuries, who were treated at the hospital. The show featured in the national press and attracted interested visitors from across the country.

The current exhibition is Reggae Rebels, which runs until 8 January 2011. (See page 4 for full details.)

Everything on offer at Hackney Museum is free, and staff are on hand to welcome visitors.

TOUR guides will be delving into the borough's many walking trails as part of the upcoming Autumn Ambles weekend (25-26 September).

These free walks take in many of the borough's award-winning green spaces, pointing out historical features and wildlife along the way.

One walk will link three local parks – Clissold Park, Hackney Downs and Victoria Park – following the trail set to be used in the London 2012 walking event.

A second will lead ramblers from Lee Valley Marshes to the Olympic Park, taking in Springfield Park, Hackney Marshes and finishing with a view of the stadium. Cllr Feryal Demirci, Cabinet Member for Neighbourhoods, said: "The weekend is a great way to show people how easy it is to get around Hackney, and encourages residents and visitors to take some free, simple steps towards a healthy lifestyle."

Autumn Ambles is one of three annual guided walking weekends organised by Walk London and supported by Transport for London (TfL). The walks, 54 in total, connect some of London's best attractions, parks, woodland, rivers, canals and open spaces. All are led by experienced guides, with local history and wildlife experts joining some. They start and finish within easy reach of public transport.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Charles Holden designed Tube stations such as Southgate

Stop off at design exhibition

AN exhibition showing original drawings, photographs and journals tells the story of one of London Underground's most important architects, Charles Holden.

Of the 270 stations on the Underground network, more than 40 were designed by Holden (1875-1960). Today, his Piccadilly Line stations, such as Arnos Grove, Boston Manor and Southgate, are Grade II* listed and regarded as icons. He is also known for his Northern line stations and the interior refurbishment of many of them.

Holden's plans and images for London Underground headquarters, on top of St James Park station, will also be on display. At the time it was the tallest office building in London and dominated the skyline in 1929.

'Underground Journeys: Charles Holden's designs for London Transport' is open from 2 October-19 February at the V&A Museum, SW7. For more info call: 020 7942 2000; or visit: www.vam.ac.uk

Chris leads by example on the Sky Ride

Boris Johnson leads the Skyride, with Kelly Brook and Sir Chris Hoy

STARS from the worlds of cycling and television got on their bikes to join Boris Johnson at the Mayor of London's Sky Ride.

Actress Kelly Brook, four-time Olympic champion Sir Chris Hoy, and riders from Team Sky, Britain's new professional road cycling team, headed the queue of cyclists of all ages and abilities numbering more than 85,000 – including a large number of participants from Hackney. The group took to the streets of central London to join in the biggest mass participation cycling event ever held in the UK on 6 September.

The extended 15km route took in the capital's most iconic landmarks from the Tower of London, to Buckingham Palace, via the City of London, The Houses of Parliament, and St Paul's Cathedral.

Sir Chris Hoy said: "Seeing the capital's streets traffic-free with so many people enjoying a day out cycling together is a great experience. Getting the opportunity to cycle past Big Ben and the Houses of Parliament was something extra special. The best part of these events is that it doesn't matter if you're a novice or a more experienced rider, they have something for all ages and abilities. I'm hoping that everyone who took part will continue to cycle and enjoy all the fun and benefits it brings."

Job Profile

Social worker at Homerton hospital talks to Hackney Today about the role

What are the main responsibilities of the role?

Social workers help children and families when concerns are raised about the safety and well-being of children. We meet with the family to assess the situation, determine any risks to the children and identify how to best support the family to ensure the children's safety and healthy development.

In what ways is it challenging?

We work with families with a range of difficult issues including substance misuse, mental health issues, domestic violence, and poverty. It is challenging to try to help families address those issues. Social workers also hold a lot of responsibility for protecting vulnerable populations, such as children, which can be challenging.

How is the job rewarding?

As a social worker, the relationships you build with the family are very rewarding. Although we do not always become involved with families under the best of circumstances, it is special when you are able to form a positive relationship and help them make meaningful changes in their home and family life.

Are there any special requirements for fulfilling the role?

Social work requires a recognised General Social Care Council (GSCC) professional qualification. A satisfactory Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) disclosure at enhanced level is also required.

have your say

THIS is the latest in a series of regular recipes courtesy of Waterhouse – an eco-friendly restaurant alongside the Regent's Canal in Shoreditch.
Chef James Blonde looks forward to an autumn treat of pheasant, cooked in liquid to mitigate the legendary toughness of this almost fat-free bird.
He explains: "As well as being seasonal, and organic, pheasants are also cheap, because folks like eating them less."

Poached pheasant & stock sauce

Serves two

Preparation time 30 mins 10

Cooking time 8 hours 8

Ingredients

- 2 pheasant carcasses, legs and breasts removed. This is easy to do, but you could ask the butcher to do it instead
- 2 shallots
- 1 onion
- 1 head of garlic
- 1 carrot
- 1 leek
- 2 stalks of celery
- 2 blades of mace
- 1 bayleaf
- Black pepper
- 40g butter
- 1tbs flour
- 2 large shots Irish whiskey
- 1 glass red wine
- Water
- Cream.

Method

for the stock sauce

- Try to smash up the pheasant carcasses as much as you can. Put all the dry ingredients including the spices, but not the flour, in a roasting pan with the unpeeled veg cut into rough chunks (a la paysanne)
- Place in a 160°C oven until it begins to colour. Then remove and decant into the biggest saucepan you have. Add the booze and cover with water. Simmer, but do not boil, for at least eight hours, adding water if necessary
- Reduce the remaining liquid by half and strain into a smaller pan.

for the poached pheasant

- Place the pheasant breasts and legs in a wide bottomed pan with a light film of vegetable – not olive – oil and fry on a low heat until gently coloured. Turn and repeat
- Add stock gradually trying to keep the liquid at a gentle simmer. If you boil it too fast the legs especially will become tough. The joints are cooked when an inserted skewer releases clear juice, if there is blood in it, cook on. The breasts will be ready before the legs
- When they are cooked, reserve while you finish the sauce. Place the butter and flour in a bowl and blend together. Then whisk into the sauce and reduce to a pleasing consistency. Finally, finish with a little cream
- Grill the pheasant pieces briefly, skin side up to crisp, and plate with the sauce. Serve with seasonal vegetables of your choice.

Top tips

- At Waterhouse we marinate the pheasant for a few days for extra tenderness

The Mayor & Councillors

Councillors are elected by Hackney residents and serve for four years.

The last borough elections were in May 2010.

Councillors have a range of responsibilites, including helping to oversee the Council and its services.

They hold advice surgeries where residents can meet their local representative and ask them to take up issues that may be of concern.

Generally they can help with Council related matters, but if the issue is the responsibility of another person or organisation, councillors can often point people in the right direction and tell residents who they need to see.

Hackney has 57 councillors representing areas called wards – illustrated in the map opposite.

Please note that some councillors do not hold surgeries in August. To check surgery times, call: 020 8356 3373. More info: www.hackney.gov.uk/l-mayor-cabinet-councillors.htm
